Bray is the village of the name near Maidenhead in Berkshire. According to Fuller (see ref below) the 'vicarious vicar' held the benefice from the reign of Henry VIII to that of Elizabeth and was twice a Papist and twice a Protestant. In the later song to which the currency of the phrase is mainly due the sovereigns under whom the vicar successively changes his religion and politics are those from Charles II to George I.

Vice- (vais), prefix representing L vice in place of see prec. Originally this governed a following word in the genitive, but in late L the tendency to use the phrase as a compound noun appears in vicequæstor (equivalent to prôquæstor of analogous origin) In med L. such formations became common, as vicecomes, -consul, -decanus, -dominus, -princeps, -rector, -rex, etc From the 13th cent onwards a number of these appear in E., at first usually with the prefix in the form of vis-, vys-, but latterly assimilated as a rule to the Latin original Similar compounds with vice are also employed in It, Sp., and Pg The older examples in English, having been taken immediately from French, also present the prefix in the reduced forms vis (vys-, vis-) and vi (vy), subsequently replaced by vice (also in early use vise-) except in Viscount the more important compounds are given below as main words, the following are illustrations of less usual or more recent terms

a With personal designations, especially titles of office, indicating that the person so called acts temporarily or regularly in place of, in the absence of, or as assistant to, another who properly holds the office or bears the title or name, as vice-abbot, -agent, -Apollo, apostle, architect, etc Also occas transf, as vice nature

In the dictionaries of Florio an I Midge many examples of similar forms are employed to render the Italian and French equivalents, e g vice-captain, cardinal, censor, commissary, etc

2. In special collocations with other Latin words. In addition to those illustrated below, various others are or have been in use, as vis acceleratrix, centrifuga, centripeta, impressa, insita, etc. A number of these appear in dictionaries from about 1700 onwards.

a. Vis major, such a degree of superior force that no effective resistance can be made to it.

1602 HOLLAND Pliny I. 599 Hailes, stormes of wind and raine, and such like impressions of the aire, which whensoever they doe light, are termed by the Lawyers, Vis major, i. the greater violence. 1866 LD. BLACKBURN in Hurlstone & Coltman Rep. IV. 571 He can excuse himself by shewing that..the escape was the consequence of vis major or the act of God.

b. Vis inertiæ, the resistance naturally offered by matter to any force tending to alter its state in respect of rest or motion; also transf., tendency on the part of persons, etc., to remain inactive or unprogressive.
